

Some botanical-based products are developed by doctors.

Go for: The Purify & Energise Super Bioactive ($45) serves as a super nourishing toner with vitamins A, B and C. Use in place of water when cleansing, or apply after cleansing to restore skin's acid mantle.

TRY: ORGANIC APOTEKE ($48 to $169, The World of Organic Skincare) This UK label was developed by a biochemist and a medical team. It's a marriage of nature and high-tech science: Active ingredients are wrapped in eight layers of botanical oils and floral water to deliver the goodness deep into the dermis. Organic Apoteke products are certified organic by EcoCert. Go for: The Rasayana Rejuvenating Serum ($169), which rebuilds collagen with essential oils, ubiquinone, and other botanicals; and Droseros Refreshing, Soothing & Hydrating Mist ($32), a travel-sized rose-water spray that cools and calms flushed skin.

"Where's the doctor's seal of approval?"

You won't find essential oils – which can irritate sensitive skin – in Sophyto products.

Organic Apoteke uses science to deliver active ingredients into skin.

TRY: SOPHYTO ($53 to $170, Bud Cosmetics) The range is recommended by dermatologists and plastic surgeons for those who have undergone laser resurfacing, acid peels or dermabrasion. Sophyto omits essential oils (a potential cause of skin irritation for some people) from its pH-balanced products. Using them maintains the skin's natural acid mantle, and protects it from harmful bacteria. Sophyto products are certified organic by the UK's Soil Association. There's a 30-day money-back guarantee if its products do not meet your expectations.
